

Civil Cemeteries and Burial Grounds

Background

By the 1850s, churchyards across the country were becoming full. This posed a serious health risk. The 1853 Burial Acts allowed the creation of public cemeteries. These new cemeteries were run by Burial Boards. A burial board was elected by the vestry of the parish. Sometimes several smaller parishes joined together to share a burial ground. In 1894 power was taken from the vestries and given to the new parish councils. In towns and cities, powers were given to the borough councils or urban district councils from 1934.

As civil cemeteries replaced the churchyard some burials are still recorded in the parish register. If no registers for the civil cemetery survive, check the parish register (see our mini guide 4 "Parish registers").

What records are there and what information do they contain?

As each burial ground kept their own records, they vary slightly. Some early records contain less detail than later ones. Some records described as registers are really just notebooks of the burial ground clerk. For cemeteries one or some of the following has survived:

Registers of Burials

These are a list of people buried in the cemetery. The entries are in date order and are not usually indexed by name. Most registers contain:

- Name, age and occupation of deceased
- Date of burial
- Name of minister
- Number of grave
- Some registers give the place and date of death

Register of Graves

These vary greatly in the detail they contain. Some are similar to burial registers but contain information about the purchase of the grave. Others are a list of graves by number with the names of those buried in the grave.

Notices of Interment

These were documents sent to the clerk of the cemetery so that they could arrange for the burial to take place. They contain:

- Name, age and occupation of deceased
- Date and place of death
- Date and time of funeral
- Name of minister
- Number and description of grave

Lists or Registers of Purchased Graves

These record the purchase of graves. This could be just before a burial or many years before. They usually note:

- Date of purchase
- Name and residence of buyer
- The fee paid
- Number of the grave
- Religion
- Details of the burial including name of deceased and date of burial.

These can be useful as they tell you who paid for the grave. This is usually the next of kin.

Plan of the cemetery

Plans show the layout of the graves. Usually this gives the plot numbers. Some plans are marked up with the name of the person who is buried there or has purchased the grave. These may still be held by the burial authority. They have not survived for all cemeteries.

How to find the Records

A list of the records of civil cemeteries in Gloucestershire that are held at Gloucestershire Archives is provided at the end of this guide, along with other useful information. (A hard copy version is held at Gloucestershire Archives. Please ask staff if you would like to see it)

If we do not hold records you will need to contact the council that runs the cemetery. Where contact details are not given, researchers should contact the parish or town council in which the cemetery is located. Contact details for parish councils can be found on the county council website at <http://www.gloucestershire.gov.uk/extra/community>. Please note that some councils may charge you to look up entries in records, especially if a date of burial or death is not known.

All documents, and many microfilms (MF references) held at Gloucestershire Archives need to be ordered from the strongrooms.

Other sources

The Gloucestershire Family History Society have transcribed and indexed the cemetery registers for Gloucester crematorium from 1953-1975.

See their website for more details www.gfhs.org.uk

Civil Cemeteries List

The records listed in this guide are only those deposited at Gloucestershire Archives, which show the names of people buried in that cemetery. Due to the nature of these records, they may not indicate where in the burial ground they were buried. But they should be enough to confirm that the person was buried there.

Cheltenham

Opened: 1687, 1823, 1831, 1864

There were 4 main burial grounds in Cheltenham. The first was the churchyard attached to St Mary's. The second burial ground opened nearby on High Street in 1831, although the churchyard was still used. The new burial ground had a small chapel – St Mary's cemetery chapel, later St Mary's Mission. [This is now known as the Winston Churchill Memorial Garden.] In 1864 the Civil Cemetery was opened at Bouncers Lane and both previous burial grounds were closed to new burials. Burials still took place in pre-purchased or used graves, i.e. a family grave.

There was also a small burial ground for Holy Trinity (P78/4 IN 1/8 - 1823-1911). See Memorial Inscriptions for Holy Trinity Cheltenham for more details (GAL/K3).

A few non-conformist churches also had burial grounds, e.g. St Andrews Congregationalist Church. For more information see the Genealogical Handlist.

In the Cheltenham St Mary's collection (P78/1) there are the following registers for the burial grounds:

Churchyard	1687-1898
Burial Ground	1831-1935
Civil Cemetery	1864-1921

The corporation constituted the burial board for the city in 1856 and laid out a cemetery on a 13 acre site at Tredworth, which was opened in 1857 when burials in the old city churchyards ceased. The cemetery was extended in 1857, 1909 and 1911, the final extension enlarging it to 35 acres. A second city cemetery at Coney Hill was laid out in 1934 but not opened for burials until 1939. A crematorium, added to the cemetery chapel at Coney Hill, was opened in 1953.
