Dear Childminders,

Welcome to your November Newsletter, I hope those of you who got a break over half term had a lovely rest, and to everyone – don't forget the value in taking a break when you get the opportunity. You can't look after everyone else with an 'empty cup'. Never forget how important your own well-being is.

In this newsletter there is a link to our new website – please check out the 'childminder' page and let me know about anything that needs to be added. There is an online session, myself and the Business team are running about Charging Information in the evening for childminders, they are also offering to answer any questions in their newsletter. You can book on for the next free childminder play session, our future network meetings and Ofsted are delivering a free online session on the new inspection framework. The Childcare works website has a range of free resources for childminders and the latest offer from the Bristol and Beyond Stronger Practice Hub. There are some guest speakers coming along to the Network sessions so do have a look and book on if you are interested.

Information for Childminders - childcareworks.org.uk

Childcare Works have brought together the most relevant resources for childminders into easy to use collections - one focused on wraparound provision and another all about early years.

There is lots of free support and information available to them via the Childcare Works HUB.

The free courses includes - Thinking about Transitions?

Effective Transitions – A recorded presentation created by Nasen which explores strategies to support positive transitions for children with special educational needs and disabilities (SEND), particularly in the context of wraparound provision.

Strategies – A short video from Dingley's Promise which focuses on strategies to support children with SEND - including home visits, social stories, visual timetables, now and next, sustained shared thinking and turn taking.
